Overview
Writing Warriors are dedicated to continuously improving their writing. As part of our group, you will learn to overcome procrastination and writer’s block. As a result, you will become a more productive and skilled academic writer. You will develop good habits, such as time management, so that writing is a regular part of your life, rather than a chore. You will learn to use writing groups to increase your motivation and to exchange structured, substantive feedback. You will improve your technical skills (e.g., punctuation and grammar) and writing style (e.g., emphasis and concision). You will accomplish these goals by writing a few pages every week, exchanging feedback with other graduate students and faculty, and reading about the topics that most interest you.

Structure
Groups will usually meet for 60-75 minutes. You are encouraged to begin by discussing your accomplishments for the previous week and your goals for the next week. Afterwards, you are encouraged to provide each other feedback. Each writer should tell the group what kind of feedback they are looking for. One common model is to ask readers to identify the key sentence in each paragraph. Other common models are to ask readers to identify ways to make the writing more concise, look for coherence, and improve flow and organization.

“However great a man’s natural talent may be, the act of writing cannot be learned all at once.”
Jean-Jacques Rousseau

“Don’t try to figure out what other people want to hear from you; figure out what you have to say. It’s the one and only thing you have to offer.”
Barbara Kingsolver
Writing Groups

1. Each week, you should bring 2-3 pages of new or revised writing. Bring three hard copies of your writing, because there will usually be three people in each writing group.

2. During the writing group, participants will have 15-20 minutes to read the material and give feedback. How you divide these 15-20 minutes is up to the writer. For instance, the writer may choose to have 12 minutes of reading and 8 minutes of feedback.

3. The purpose of the writing groups is to provide feedback. As a writer, your job is to get as much feedback as you can during the writing group. Do not waste this valuable time by defending what you wrote originally or by re-writing the material during the meeting. Later, you will decide what to do with the feedback you have received.

4. We strongly encourage you to incorporate your feedback within 24 hours. After that, it’s hard to remember the insights you had during the meeting, even when you consult your notes.

5. You may receive feedback on almost any academic writing. You are encouraged to bring theses, dissertations, journal articles, and conference presentations.

6. If you want feedback on a class assignment, you need written permission from the instructor. Similarly, if you want feedback on your Experimental Psychology qualifying activity, you need written permission from your academic mentor.

“The beautiful part of writing is that you don’t have to get it right the first time, unlike, say, brain surgery.” Robert Cormier

“We are all apprentices in a craft where no one ever becomes a master.”
Ernest Hemingway

“Writing is about hypnotizing yourself into believing in yourself, getting some work done, then unhypnotizing yourself and going over the material coldly.”
Anne Lamott

“Good writers are those who keep the language efficient. That is to say, keep it accurate, keep it clear.”
Ezra Pound

“When I see a paragraph shrinking under my eyes like a strip of bacon in a skillet, I know I’m on the right track.”
