To whom it may concern:

I am an international student who is currently taking English 114 after finishing 113 last semester. Before I came to UNLV, I spent my previous 4 years in another state in America and Canada for my high school years. I still can not forget the first year of my high school life when the sentence with more than five words considered to be the awfully long and complicated. Luckily, in high school, even though I was in the same class room with other Americans, teachers treated me differently; they gave me more time on the same assignment, corrected my mistakes on homework more generously, also gave me a kind advice whenever I needed one. Having a hard time on learning and speaking English was hard enough to make my life frustrated. But the feeling of isolation that I could not belong to the class, school and the society, at that time, was worse. Teacher's care and advise were not only a survival guide in class but also an interconnection to my better future, the only motivation kept me from giving up. The English help centers and ESL classes have been my new interconnection to the future then. I'm wishing to have here, UNLV. And it is to almost all ESL students. Please don't eliminate this only, the best, connection to be belonged here.

Sincerely,

So Young Park (1-000-624-886)
